

Tips for Housetraining Success

Housetraining is usually a topic that is associated with puppies, but in some instances it can be a problem with adult dogs as well. No matter the age of your dog, if he is having accidents around the house, it can be extremely frustrating. Housetraining is an issue that should be immediately addressed.

What not to Do when Housetraining

One of the most important things to understand about housetraining is that punishment is never effective. In general, punishment usually only serves to make your dog afraid of you and that will delay housetraining. Instead, a positive approach is necessary to achieve the desirable goals. In addition, it is imperative that you maintain consistency when housetraining your dog. You must develop a plan for training your dog and then stick with it. If there are other members within the family, everyone needs to be consistent with using the same method for housetraining as well as the location for the dog to eliminate. If you continually change where you expect the dog to eliminate or even change the method of training, your results will likely not be as successful as you would like.

You also need to understand the importance of taking your dog out to eliminate as soon as he awakens in the morning. Do not force your dog to wait or you will likely face a mess to be cleaned up. The same thing is true for when your dog awakens from a nap.

Along the same lines, remember that scheduling can be essential to successful housetraining. If you establish a feeding schedule for your dog and then take him out to eliminate within 20 to 30 minutes after he has eaten you will be able to have far greater success with housetraining.

There are many different techniques that can be used for housetraining. Techniques that many owners have found to be successful include crate training, which also works well with other training procedures as well.

Getting Help with Housetraining Issues

Some guidance with housetraining issues can be helpful if you have tried housetraining your dog and you are still experiencing problems. Do not let it get you down if you have not had immediate housetraining success. The Complete 7 Day Potty Training Guide is a good resource that can walk you through the steps of getting your dog housetrained in as little time as possible.